"MY HANDS ARE SUPER WET RIGHT NOW!" AND OTHER CREATIVE RESPONSES TO GIVE THAT GUY YOU REALLY DON'T WANT TO DANCE WITH

We've all ben there, ladies, amiright? You're hanging with your girls, just a couple of dirty bitches having a wild time. You're young, you're free, you all have IUDs. Then—it happens. A man walks up to you. He dares to look you in the eyes. He holds out a hand —the kind that's only seen the inside of a Zyn tin and untuned guitar strings. Disgusted, you shrink back, bare your teeth. You stop yourself. You're a lady, not some common trollop. Surely there's a better way to escape this awkward situation...

1. "My hands are super wet right now!"

It's true. They are really wet right now. God served you the perfect excuse on a silver platter. You're done. Why are they wet? Doesn't matter. The look of confusion on his face will keep you fed for months. Girl, you won.

2. "I come from Footloose-town."

A time to laugh... and a time to weep. A time to mourn... and there is a time to dance. Just not now. Now is not that time.

3. "Sorry, my polycule isn't accepting new members."

You'll need a few friends for this one, but it's guaranteed to make a splash. Be sure to throw a few smooches in there to really seal the deal. Just not too many, this guy is REALLY into lesbians.

4. "Ok!" And start doing the choreography from "A Chorus Line"

Don't pretend like you don't know it. If you're reading this, you know it. You should do it. Right now. Do it, you stupid little idiot. Do the dance.

5. "The last time I danced, my dad died in a car accident."

This is NOT TRUE. Your dad is at home, just sittin' in a lumpy chair in your living room. He's probably watching "Yellowstone" with some BIG ASS headphones on. He's eating a ginormous salad. Truly a salad that is bigger than any other salad you've ever seen before. He says he's "decided to try out Keto." Why would you want to try Keto, dad? You're gonna give yourself low bone density. Do you want bone fractures? Also, you literally chew tobacco, since when were you such a beacon of health? Who do you think you are, Jesus? Newsflash, Jesus died. Get over yourself.

Or, you could just dance with him. What's the worst that could happen? You dance, have a few drinks. You start going steady. He meets your parents, they like that he comes from a "good family." Years pass. He proposes —you have a June wedding: lavender and cream. Surprise! You're pregnant, and it's a boy. You move to the suburbs. You start to grow apart. You're both so busy that you don't have time to be intimate anymore. The kids move out. You rekindle the flame. One day, you get a call. It was a heart attack. You visit his grave every Sunday. You bring daisies, his fav- Oops, too late. He's making out with another girl. It's okay. He was kind of an uggo anyways.

THERE IT GOES: ROTUNDA DOME BREAKS FREE OF RESTRAINTS, FLIES INTO SPACE

A thunderous sound was heard around the University early Friday morning as the strained restraints that have long harnessed the Rotunda's dome to the Earth finally snapped. The Rotunda was erected only a few short years after the founding of the University and is often identified as one of the University's most important symbols. However, historical documents released after the dome took off indicate that the most difficult and resource-consuming task for both the original builders of the University and every successive administration has been keeping the building together. "Past Rotunda renovations, often publicly focused on frivolities like 'fixing a leaky roof' or 'building a women's bathroom,' have in fact been coverups for attempts to keep the dome from wandering off," said University President Jim Ryan in a press conference Friday afternoon. The president, who was wearing a t-shirt emblazoned with "THE DOME MUST ROAM," continued, telling reporters that "now that it's gone, we can reveal the incredibly complicated system of pulleys, levers, and other simple machines that have allowed the Rotunda's dome to remain tethered to our Earth."

Ryan, who gave his press conference from inside a massive 300-foot deep compound dug under the Rotunda, gestured widely at what was behind him, saying "look at it! It's like the Mines of fuckin' Moria!" The cave, whose walls were covered with shaky wooden platforms and a bizarre number of ziplines, was built with the express intent of housing the Rube-Goldberg-machine-esque contraption that held the dome in place. The apparatus, first designed by Jefferson in 1825 after five other domes had escaped, was tenuously held together with rope, wood, and heavy rocks that weighed the dome down and kept it from shooting off into the great unknown. "Despite many past attempts, we were never able to introduce steel cables, metal clasps, or other advancements made possible by the Industrial Revolution to the structure, as these would cause the dome to react violently," said Rotunda Dome Retention Head Connor Centric, who stated that despite the apparently docile and unmoving nature of the dome to outside observers, "that thing wanted out-bad."

The dome, which had reportedly made it past Neptune by 6:00 PM Friday, is unlikely to ever return to Earth due to what experts have called "some weird fucked up version of gravity that only it possesses." The now roofless Rotunda has led to some pressing questions for those in the administration, with many wondering what comes next. "It took a lot of manpower and a lot of money," said Centric, "and a lot of people straight up died. Truly, a countless number of workers supervising the thing. And it still got away. Fuck me, man. I'm getting fired. This was my entire job. Fuck." Some faculty, such as Professor of Geometry Bob Oblong, offered their input, with Oblong stating that "my formal recommendation would be that we stop half-assing it and just go for a full sphere. Or... I don't know. An oval, maybe." The University was officially noncommittal when asked whether the apparently massive amount of the budget for retaining the dome would be redirected in the wake of its launch, but at one point during the press conference, President Ryan mouthed "Daddy needs a new pair of shoes."

SHANNON LIBRARY UNVEILS NEW ‘SMUT SECTION’ IN AN ATTEMPT TO INCREASE LITERACY ON GROUNDS

This Sunday, visitors to Shannon Library will be delighted to see that the Graduate Student Lounge has been renovated into a state of the art “goon lair.” This is part of the University’s initiative to promote reading (for pleasure) among the student body. Shelves are lined with classics of the genre, such as “Fifty Shades of Grey” and “Ice Planet Barbarians,” as well as more niche titles, like our personal favorites, “My Dark, Brooding Boyfriend is Actually a Werewolf, and We Make Sweet, Sweet Love, But Not In A Bestiality Way” and the sequel “Ok, So Maybe In A Bestiality Way.” The library has also invested in a physical archive of that weird shit you read on Wattpad in middle school.

We interviewed student Gizmo Miller to gauge reactions to the shift. “I mean, my girlfriend’s all into that ‘Booktok’ shit, so I’m sure she’s happy,” he said. “It’s just that, ever since she started reading, I think our relationship has gotten a little strained. She keeps calling me her ‘gay little boyfriend,’ and saying stuff like ‘OMG, you’re such a bottom.’ Look—sometimes the lid on the pickle jar is really tight, and just because I can’t get it open on my first few tries does NOT mean I’m a bottom. I’m straight. And a Republican. Whatever. The more she reads, the more time I have to play die with the boys. Am I right? Haha.”

YJ's Top 5 Icebreakers

Been feeling like your club is falling apart? In utter shambles? Don't know how to break the awkward eye contact that comes from sitting in a mostly empty New Cab room with someone you think you might recognize from class? Have no fear, we here at The Yellow Journal are here to help by sharing some of our favorite icebreakers!

Spin the Bottle!

Pancakes for Parkinson's meeting starting to drag? Go out with a bang— a mouth bang, that is, and taste that sweet, sweet syrup.

Sexual Two Truths and a Lie

Try this at 3D Printing Club! You can 3D print anything. Anything...

Fuck, Marry, Kill

This is my favorite to start Yellow Journal meetings with, but make sure you're ready to follow through, otherwise we all leave disappointed. TBH (to be honest) I just really want to fuck, marry, and kill my fellow club members.

Lil' Nell

Battle Royale

Kick start your College Mentors for Kids meeting with a fight to the death. What can we say? There are too many kids, not enough college mentors.

The Quiet Game

We think this would be particularly effective with The Washington Society. Shut the fuck up, you and your Harry Potter house bullshit.

Bonus Questions!

Once the icebreakers are over, get to know your members by asking the following

- Who pissed their pants most recently?
- How hot is your mom on a scale of 1 to 10?
- If we're in a simulation, but that simulation is in a simulation, how do we know that we're not simply a single bit in the overall architecture built by a passive tech-god?
- I think I'd rate my mom a 9, is that bad?

Let's face it. You did it. You told your roommate you'd be down to fuck. You've been slightly hinting for weeks (your room was NOT that cold), and you were able to hide under the art of subtlety, but it happened. You goofed it. You said it out loud.

JIM RYAN TO BE REPLACED BY BOSS BABY, BIG (AND SMALL) THINGS COMING

On Thursday, the Board of Visitors made the executive decision to replace UVA President Jim Ryan, effective immediately. The incoming president, 20th Century Studios own Boss Baby, has a lot to do to gain the trust of the student body back. "It's a tall order," he says while sucking on his thumb like it's a cigarette, "but if anyone can do it it's me. I'm the fucking boss baby".

In the days following the announcement, UVA students have taken to the streets to protest his arrival. Marching in front of the rotunda with signs reading "You're Not the Boss of Me" and "Can He Even Read?" The UVA police have yet to step in, probably because they're too busy changing his diaper and chewing up his food for him like he's a little bird.

"When I said anyone could do his job, I didn't mean a baby," says frustrated 4th year Grace Applebaum. "Just because he's wearing a suit doesn't make him qualified to run all of UVA." No one knows what policies Boss Baby will be putting in place as of yet. When asked what he has planned, he said "goo goo gaga, bitch. And if you don't like it, grow up!"

I WENT TO THE RACETRACK AND PRETENDED TO BE A HORSE FOR SOME FREE HAY. NOW, I'M IN LANE 7 AND A LITTLE MAN IS ON TOP OF ME

I'm a generally normal guy, right? I work at a pharmacy - as a cashier, not a "pusher" - and I've got a smoking hot girlfriend. I don't want for much in this world. I also engage in some arts and crafts on the side. It's a hobby, sure, but also a business. I make scarecrows for local farmers. The scarecrow has always been alluring to me. A thing pretending to be a man who sometimes has a bird land on him. I feel like that, sometimes. I'm sure you do too.

Now, what do you need to make a scarecrow? Exactly. Hay. And it's hard to buy just a scarecrow's worth of hay. Basically, it's gotta be bulk bought by the bale. And I don't have bale of hay money. I don't make that kind of hay.

So what do I do? I go to the racetrack. I put on a horse mask. I wear brown. And I wear hoofs. I've been doing this for years. Never any problems. I buzz the gate, they see my horse face on the camera, they let me in to the horse door, and I start shoving hay into my pants to take home for later. Simple! Sometimes, one of the guys even gives me an apple, or a sugar cube. That's primo. I like that.

I was hoping for the same this time. Little guy comes up and waves an apple in front of me. I know this story. I recognize him. It's Manuelo. He's nice. Generous with the cubes. I'm hungry, so I follow him. Suddenly—and I swear, I've never seen anything move as fast as Manuelo did here—he swings up and he's on my shoulders. He's strapping up a saddle. Next thing I know, he's whacking me with a riding crop! What's going on!

So now, here I am. I'm in Lane 7. I'm visibly shorter than the horses next to me, who are named "Flup Dipsie" and "Heartless Joe," because they're actually horses, and I'm 5 foot 9. Plus, I've only got two legs! I don't even know how I got this far. I think Manuelo has it figured out, because everytime he digs his heels into my ribs I make a very human sound of pain, but at this point it's too late. They announced my name as "Dixon Suxem." That feels inappropriate, right? Don't kids bet on this?
